The range aims to set a benchmark for vibrant flavours and outstanding value for money.

The Region

The island of Sicily is located off the foot of Italy in the heart of the Mediterranean, and enjoys an enviable climate and hugely fertile soils. Originally famed for its production of dessert wines such as Marsala, Sicily has undergone a renaissance with an influx of international winemakers applying modern winemaking techniques and philosophies, all leading to a drastic improvement in the quality of both red and white table wines..

The Grape – Grillo

An important grape that is found throughout the western regions of Sicily, Grillo is crisp and medium bodied in texture, with moderate acidity and plenty of aromatics. Traditionally it was used almost exclusively for the production of Marsala, but its potential for creating quality dry whites has been more recently recognised and is rapidly gaining in popularity. Grillo is a late ripening varietal, typically grown on bush vines, and needs a warm to hot climate to prosper – it is therefore no surprise that it has thrived on the sundrenched hills of Sicily for over 2000 years.
